Chapter 1 by Ethan Wait

He heard it again. Inside the attic of Simon LeBlanc's house, he kept hearing a loud thump-thump like the sound of a ball being bounced above him.

He shouldn't. He wouldn't. He couldn't check it out! But the curiosity was so intense that he had to take a look.

He pulled down the ladder to his attic with a loud creak and ascended the old, rusty steps.

When he reached the top, he screamed.

"What the heck is this!" He whispered to himself. Before were three large, round cats. They were fatter than life. It was because of this that they could not walk, only bounce.

They were uncommonly hyper, and for being so big, not even lethargic. It was a strange combination. I wondered how they got like this. Eating to many rats, someone's experiment, or just water bloat? I could'y figure it out.
